1. INTRODUCTION

Apart from the use of slang in certain domains, slang has also been widespread in all aspects among teenagers. Slang is not only used in an informal context but has also been carried over in formal contexts such as school, family life, and the world of work. The study of the relationships that occur between language and society in linguistics is called sociolinguistics. According to Meyerhoff (2013) Sociolinguistics is a science used to describe various ways of learning languages. According to him, the topics studied are how someone uses language, how to use different languages when they are in different cities, and how a country decides which language to use in education or law.

O'Grady (1997) slang are labels or signs that are often used to indicate the use of informal language by most people in a speech community. Difficulty using slang does not only occur when watching movies, but also in communicating with other people. According to Trudgill (2000) sociolinguistics covers various topics such as language and social class, language and ethnicity, language and gender, language policy and planning, both in the field of education and so on. There are language variety of sociolinguistics terms offered such as dialect, idiolect, social dialect, temporal dialect, and register. According to Siemund (2011) language variations are areas or domains related to sociolinguistics and dialect.

The difference in motivation or reasons is the reason people don't always use English slang when speaking. For some people it is more comfortable to speak formally than using slang. Usually, the use of standard English is often chosen for formal communication, such as for conducting interviews and talking with new people. According to Cong & Silitonga (2015) said that slang can be used by people in groups to share ideas and attitudes as a form of distinguishing themselves from other people or groups.

The researcher found some article and previous research, First Slang Analysis Based on Variant Information Extraction Focusing on the Time Series Topics The paper try to detecting the magnitude of the power in the change in variation is by using a variant degree score. Second The Use of English Slang
